Sydney broken hill adelaide road trip

I spent some time in a car over the holiday weekend (which is unusual for my city, pedestrian self), so I had a good excuse to stop at Trader Joe's and get one of my favorite snacks in advance. I grabbed a bag of Chile TJ's Mango Spices. These dried fruits are delicious because they have a sweet mango flavor (which you know I love), as well as a hint of spice. It's a little high in sugar so I try to limit myself to just a few pieces at a time, but even just a few is enough to satisfy. Yum! At this point, the of us have probably seen many articles on how to design the Best Road Trip Ever. We've all fantasize about following these lines on the map, and could get particularly anxious now that summer is (let's just say it's not like that!) in its final month. While I personally hate driving most of the time, driving for the sake of pleasure and adventure makes me feel queasy - just the idea of a road trip spurs excitement and a sense of possibility. Road trips have always been attractive to those of us who dream of leaving our responsibilities in the mirror and moving on to more exciting exciting We're thinking of sticking our feet out the window while someone else drives, exploring different cuisine from cities across the country, and all the great photos we'll have to take. So last week, when I moved from Southern California to New York, I decided to take the plunge. Even though it would be a more time-efficient option to have flown, I made the decision to drive. I talked to my boyfriend Dane and my dog Milo. We made the trip in a quick five days - and loved every minute of it. It wasn't just an amazing trip, it was also informative. I learned some important things about how to have a successful (and fun!) road trip along the way. Here are my top seven tips.1. Wear a (dry) swimsuit as underwear. Depending on your route, of course, you can go through some beautiful (and tempting!) bodies of water. It's such a hassle to change out of your clothes and into a swimsuit at a rest stop, so why not skip a step and put your suit on first thing in the morning? I found out the hard way when we stopped jumping into the Colorado River. I had to change in the front seat of our rental car, and I'm sure a stranger saw my ass. Never again!2. Bring a lot of cash for the toll roads. I paid about $65 to drive across the country, only in toll fees. After the first three, I started calling them troll booths because I started to feel like I was the butt of some kind of cosmic joke. I didn't take the toll into my budget, which was a small mistake. Before you leave, consider your route and try to assess how many booths you will spend so you have some idea of how much to include in your travel budget, and pull some cash out before you leave to avoid foreign ATM fees along the way.3. Camp or stay with friends whenever possible. My road trip was for a purpose - to head out towards a new chapter of life. Because of this, I wanted to find a balance between having fun and saving money. It turned out that these things weren't mutually-excluded! I planned the route and then immediately booked camping along the way. We also stayed with a friend one night and got a reasonably priced hotel last night, in which I gave my dog a bath - (sorry, Red Roof Inn, Toledo)! Scrapping the cost of camping hotels was fun and cost-effective, and it was a good idea to sleep in a bed on the last night and get to our destination relaxing.4. Download your podcasts in advance. No matter where you go, you can hit certain areas that don't serve. We had the foresight to have some podcast episodes and music on our phones instead of relying on streaming content. Our favorite podcast to listen to this journey was The Ethicist, although we didn't always agree with the answers they gave to some of the dilemmas that people asked about, each episode sparked a lot of debate and made the miles fly by.5. Get a dog. One of the reasons we drove was because we had to take my dog, Milo, all over the country, and her idea of him in a box made me nervous. He loved the car, and the trip was a lot more fun with him around. He particularly loved camping, and would watch stare out of the tent's window panels every morning to make sure no squirrel or rabbit passed by invisible. I highly recommend traveling with a puppy, as long as the dog does well in the car and you are willing to stop and hike around every now and then to keep them healthy and happy.6. You need less clothes - but more socks - than you think. Confession: I'm a chronic over-packer. I bring too many clothes on every trip I take, even if it's only overnight, because I always think, maybe, just maybe, I should wear this printed jumpsuit while hiking somewhere in Utah. I'm always wrong, and every day I end up in my trusty cut-offs and a T-shirt. My advice to you is this: bring fewer clothes than you think you'll need, and bring more socks than you think you'll need. If you're going to be hiking around and jumping into rivers (and why won't you?!) your feet are going to end up dirty, and it's likely you'll go through more than a couple a day. Bonus tip: pack your things in Ikea bags so that everything is accessible and you don't get your expensive luggage dirty. Extra bonus tip: here are some key road trips Vogue has rounded up. I highly recommend makeup wipes and dry shampoo.7. Grocery stores are your friend. One of the best places to travel is exploring food from different places. However, this can get expensive, and I highly recommend being picky about your food purchases. It can be hard to eat both healthy and cheap food when you don't have access to a kitchen, but many groceries have bulk bins, pre-cut fruits, and salad bars now, so you can get a cheap snack along the way you'll feel good about. Pictures: Stocksnap, Giphy Giphy
